Answer:
An Umpire and

Turn Negatives Into Positives!

- Take a step back from the situation and try to view it in a positive light looking for possible solutions that will bring about good results.
- If you've done something to offend someone, try your hardest to turn that negative event into a positive one. Own what you are responsible for in the form of an apology, and then let your friend or relative know they mean a lot to you.
- Every day wake up and make a list of ten things you can be positive about even if you've had a rough night's sleep. This will turn your negative feelings into positive ones!

—Diane Wilks Nolan

Sunrise Promises

There is something quietly powerful about a sunrise. No matter how dark the night has been, the sun still rises. It doesn't ask permission. It doesn't wait for us to feel ready. It simply appears again and reminds us that darkness never gets the final word.

Some mornings arrive after peaceful sleep and some arrive after tears, worry, and sleepless nights. Yet somehow, the sunrise still comes.

God built that rhythm into creation for a reason. The sunrise is proof that God specializes in new beginnings. Peter failed Jesus, yet grace met him at sunrise on the shore. The women approached the tomb at sunrise and discovered resurrection hope. Jacob wrestled through the night, but blessing came with the dawn.

The sun rises because God told it to. And the same God who commands the morning is watching over you today.

—Thanks, Perry Wm. Bell, Greeley, CO

Days Gone By

His Voice Was Calm

I had to undergo another cataract surgery on my right eye. I was especially anxious, because I prayed it would preserve my sight. I already had an unsuccessful cataract surgery done in my left eye, and I couldn't see in it at all. It was devastating.

Fear gripped me as I waited to be wheeled into surgery, but then a stranger approached my bed, and asked if he could pray for me and held my hand gently. I almost declined, but something urged me to say yes. His voice was calm and steady, and when he finished, he wished me God's speed, and quickly walked away. Suddenly, a deep peace settled over me.

After surgery, I wanted to thank him, but I couldn't. No one seemed to know who he was. I was so happy, though, to have my vision partly restored. I so believe that he was one of God's earth angels, and helped me to grant my fervent wish.

FOUR WAYS TO AN EXTRAORDINARY LIFE

Do the best you can at everything you do. Half-done jobs cause frustration for everyone concerned. In turn, a job well done offers a sense of satisfaction and pride.

Be willing to offer an apology even when you're not in the wrong. Letting go of principles is the first step to giving up the fight. Saying "I'm sorry" releases both the person who wronged you and yourself from bitterness.

Show kindness to others even when they are rude to you. We have all been there. We're waiting in line at a supermarket or department store and the employee acts in an unprofessional way. We think of ways to get even. We consider writing a letter to the manager or lashing back at them with hurtful remarks. An extraordinary person stops to consider that the rude person may be going through a tough time. He will smile and simply say, "I hope you have a good day."

Be of service to someone else. Wouldn't it be nice to be able to lie down at the end of a lifetime and know that everyday you lived you brought joy to someone's life? — By Nancy Gibbs

Getting Extra Steps

When you are out and about, try parking further away from the entrance of the store you visit. Small lifestyle adjustments like parking at the far end of a lot could count toward your weekly physical activity goals. These short bursts of movement stack up over time to provide meaningful health improvements. If you do this just twice a day, you can accumulate roughly 140,000 extra steps over a year.

Handy Hints

Mosquitoes and Bananas

Rubbing the inside of a banana peel on a mosquito bite can help relieve itching. Banana peels are rich in antioxidants, flavonoids, and polysaccharides, which naturally modulate inflammation and soothe irritated skin.

Dear Ramsey The Executor Has One Job

Dear Dave,

My wife and her siblings each inherited about $10,000 when their dad passed away. One of her siblings, who was named executor of the estate, told my wife that she plans to withhold the money from one of their siblings. She said it's because she thinks she's financially irresponsible. My wife and I don't think this is the right thing to do, and we're wondering if it's even legal. Can you give us some answers? —Mike

Dear Mike,

You and your wife are correct. What her sibling is planning isn't right. On top of that, this person also doesn't have the legal authority to withhold the money.

The reason a person is called the "executor" in these situations is because it's their sole job to execute the directives of the deceased person that are contained in the will. The executor isn't a trust officer who gets to decide what's best. An executor is there to make sure the directions in the will are followed. Period. It doesn't matter what the executor thinks about the deceased's wishes or if they agree with them.

When you pick the executor of your will, you should always make sure that person has the honesty and integrity to execute your will. Any executor who tries pulling something like this is liable to be sued by the person from whom they withheld an inheritance. And guess what? The person suing them would win, because the executor will have violated their fiduciary responsibility.

Mike, if you and your wife haven't already spoken with the sibling who's the executor, you need to do it now—before this thing gets too far out of hand. Sooner or later, someone in the family's going to let it slip that one sibling did another one dirty where the will is concerned. Families talk. You know that, and I know that. It will happen.

And right now, this particular sibling-executor is about to create a whole lot of trouble for themselves if they follow through with this dumb idea. — Dave

Jim's FBI Happenings

Your Good Friend
Retired FBI Agent,

Dishonesty Can Feel So Bad

You Commit Suicide

After retiring from the FBI, my wife and I moved to Hendersonville, Tennessee, just north of Nashville. I took a job with the Tennessee State Charitable and Solicitation Division of the Secretary of State Office. Fifty percent of the income from bingo was supposed to go to charity. It was determined that only approximately 20% was accounted for charity.

There were three state representatives and senators who were involved in this case, which were later convicted and sentenced.

The Secretary of State, who hired me, went out on his back porch, and committed suicide.

It is believed that he hired me, because the governor was pressing him to get the bingo problem solved in Tennessee.

In life, we all have to go through difficult situations. If we can all help, instead of being a hindrance to honesty, and a good life, I believe America would be a happier place.
